

How evolutionary economics can respond to the global challenges of our time

Bengt-Åke Lundvall

Evolutionary economics should respond to the global challenges of our time. In the Anthropocene there is a need to understand how environmental degradation co-evolves with global inequality. The formation of intellectual monopolies and techno-nationalism requires new perspectives on innovation and private ownership to knowledge. 'Economics' as a separate discipline - neglecting power and nature - is becoming increasingly irrelevant.